Hahib: Thanks for coming over, Seiji. I need your advice.

Seiji: What advice?

Hahib: (A) I've got to get a wedding present for my sister, and souvenirs for lots of people.
(B)

Seiji: I don't think I can be of much help, but how many lots of people do you have?

Hahib: (C) My parents, my brother and his wife, my brother's children, a boy and a girl, my uncle and aunt, and their daughter, that is my cousin. And my two granddads and my two grandmoms.

Seiji: (D) Souvenirs for all your relatives?

Hahib: Well, the problem is, the relatives are all going to meet up at the wedding party.
(E)

Seiji: Well, as for the wedding present, I would recommend something very Japanese.

Hahib: Like what?

Seiji: (F) Told you I won't be of much help. I'll email Mom and ask her. (Seiji emails his mother.)

Hahib: (G)

Seiji: How old is your cousin, and how old are your brother's children?

Hahib: My cousin should be 20 something, my nephew was 4 when I left Kenya, so should be 6, and my niece was 2, so should be 4.

Seiji: (H)

Hahib: Cheaper the better. But Mom said she'll pay me back when I get back.

Seiji: (Reading the email) Mom recommends Japanese lacquerware vase or tray for the wedding present. She says lacquerware is light and not fragile, and so suitable for long journey.

Hahib: Wow! (I) Could you ask her about the other souvenirs?

Seiji: (J)

[ II ] 次の英文を読み、設問 1、2 に答えなさい。

During the night, we have sleep cycles—we go from sleeping lightly to sleeping deeply, and then into a dreaming sleep called REM sleep. REM stands for rapid eye movement, because during this sleep our eyes move about even though they're closed. Usually, people sleep talk during lighter sleep, when a small part of the brain is awake. Lots of children talk in their sleep, and it's totally normal. In fact, people do quite a few different things in their sleep, like laughing, groaning, and even whistling!

Sleepwalking usually happens within the first few hours of sleep, when you have really slow brainwaves. Your body goes on the move, but your brain is still really sleepy. Experts don't know exactly why some people sleepwalk, but they do know it is more common in children. Special chemicals that make you grow might wake you up, too. Sleepwalking can happen because you're worried, or you have a temperature, or you get partly woken up by a loud noise.

[IV] 次の英文を読み、設問 1 に答えなさい。

Before taking action, it's always good to get advice from others. But people often have different—even contradictory—points of view. (A)

Once upon a time, a father and his son bought a donkey at the market. As they set out for home, a man came up to them. "Why are you both walking?" he asked. (B) So, the son got on the donkey and the father walked alongside.

Soon, a second man came up and said, (C) So, the father and son changed places, with the father riding the donkey and the son walking beside them.

They soon encountered a third man. (D) "Why are you making your poor little son walk?" So, the father and son both got on the donkey. However, they soon encountered a fourth man. "The poor little donkey!" he shouted at them angrily. (E)

The moral of this story is that some people will criticize you no matter what you do. (F) So, remember. It's OK to give or get advice. However, in the end, it's important to respect the choices that people make.
